Indian wine importers up for start-up award

SOUL Tree Wine, the importer of Indian wine to the UK, is in the running for Start-Up Business of the Year

Wine lovers Alok Mathur and Melvin D'Souza from Solihull were looking for a new business venture and while on a trip to India they chanced upon what they believe is the next big thing in wine when they came across a group of farmers quietly starting an Indian wine revolution.

The duo believed the quality of the Indian wine was second to none and decided to introduce it to Britain and the world.

They have spent six months introducing the wine to Indian restaurants around the UK.

And they will be hoping to grab the attention of the National Business Awards judges as they look to secure the Start-Up Business of the Year gong.

The winners will be announced in a ceremony in London on 13th November.

AN engineering business has moved to Shirley.

The West Midlands Office of EMCOR Group (UK) is now located at One Cranmore Drive.

The company says the improved location allows them to better serve clients in an office which is a low-energy facility providing a quality workspace in a location that builds EMCOR's heritage within the Birmingham area.

EMCOR UK provides engineering services, facilities management, and sustainable business solutions for a diverse range of private and public sector organisations.

Neil Greensill, regional director for EMCOR Engineering Services, said: "We are thrilled to be expanding EMCOR's business in the area; the move to a more energy efficient and productive workplace was important."

"From this location we will continue to build collaborative relationships with our customers in order to further develop and shape our services to help support the efficiency of their organisations."

"The EMCOR team are delighted with our new offices and are pleased to continue our long established relationship working in Birmingham and the wider Midlands region."
